On 6/24/82 * Cleveland source provided information that Sol Fishko, captioned above, President of the International Graphics and Communication Union, Washington, D. C., had authorized an illegal strike targeting the Washington Post in the approximate time period of 1976. During the course of this strike, [REDACTED] at the Washington Post newspaper, cooperated with Fishko in keeping union members off the job at the Post. As a result of the action taken by Fishko and [REDACTED] Kathryn Graham, of the Post was able to break the Crafts Unions at the Post which resulted in tremendous monetary savings being realized by the Post. This action is thought to have occurred in the 1976 - 1977 time period. As a result of Graham breaking the Union at the Washington Post, the Post was able to realize sufficient gain that ultimately the Washington Star newspaper was forced to close. The Cleveland source mentioned above, indicates that sometime between 1976 and 1981 [REDACTED] mentioned above, was able to obtain four liquor stores in the Washington, D. C., area. It is noted that considerable capital is needed to initiate the operation of a liquor store and [REDACTED] Speculation on the part of source has it that [REDACTED] and Fishko, as a result of their negotiations in the Washington Post matter described above, obtained the sufficient capital to open and operate these liquor stores.

Re BU teletype to WFO dated 7/19/82.

A confidential source advised that Sol Fishko, President, IPGCU, had called an illegal strike against the Washington Post which eventually enabled the Post to break the trade unions at the Post. The elimination of many of the trade unions enabled the Post to realize tremendous savings in the cost of labor in the publication process. This savings allowed the Washington Post to operate at a lower cost than their competitor the Washington Star. The Washington Post was successful in driving the Washington Star out of business.

On June 4, 1982, a source of the Cleveland Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, provided information indicating that Sol Fishko, President of the International Graphics and Communications Union (IGCU), Washington, D. C., had authorized an illegal strike by employees of the Washington Post newspaper sometime during the approximate time period of 1976. During this strike, [redacted]

[redacted] at the Post, cooperated with Fishko in keeping union members off their jobs. Allegedly, as a result of the actions of Fishko and [redacted] Kathryn Graham, Chairman of the Board, The Washington Post, was able to break the craft unions and realize a substantial monetary savings for the newspaper. As a result of the failure of the IGCU to effectively represent the Washington Post employees, and the financial advantage realized by the newspaper, the Post was able to force the closing of the Washington Star, its principal competing newspaper, (by reduced advertising charges, et cetera).

The Cleveland source also indicated that sometime between 1976 and 1981, [redacted]

b6

[redacted] It is not reasonable to believe that [redacted]

The source speculates that as a result of the illegal strike and cooperation with the Post, [redacted] and Fishko obtained sufficient funds to purchase the liquor stores.

The exact date of the purchase of the liquor stores is unknown and a statute of limitations problem may exist. It is noted that during the 1977 - 1978 time period, Assistant United States Attorney (AUSA) [redacted] Major Crimes Section, United States Attorney's Office, prosecuted a case regarding the strike of Post employees.

On July 27, 1982, AUSA [redacted] was contacted regarding these allegations and at that time [redacted] provided a brief synopsis of the Washington Post labor dispute. [redacted]

On 8/5/82, [redacted] Chief Investigator, OABC advised pursuant to being requested by [redacted] he conducted a search of OABC's records in an effort to determine if [redacted] ever was affiliated with a liquor store in Washington, D. C.

[redacted] stated his review of OABC's records did not reveal any record of [redacted] being affiliated with a liquor in Washington, D. C. However, [redacted] advised, it should be noted that OABC records are maintained in the name of the liquor store and not in the name of the owners of the liquor stores. Consequently, he advised there is a possibility that [redacted] has owned and/or presently owns a liquor store, however without knowing the name of the liquor store, a review of OABC's records would not be productive. [redacted] stated if the name of the liquor store is subsequently identified, he would be able, thru a review of OABC's records, to determine if [redacted] was a principal in the liquor store.
